Great Ideas For Modern Parents | Autumn 2016

How to talk to your kids about alcohol

By Laura Jackson, LCSW, LICDC, Counselor and SUDS Supervisor

The most commonly reported age for trying alcohol is 13 years old. We know teens are more likely to engage in risky behaviors due to their increasing need for independence. While asserting independence is a sign of good development, it may make teens want to defy their parents' wishes and be difficult to be around.

If you make your teen feel respected as an individual, you will increase the chances that your child will be open and honest with you.

Risk Factors

- Times of transition, such as the onset of puberty or a parents' divorce, can lead kids to alcohol or drug use.
- Kids who have problems with self-control, low self-esteem, depression or anxiety are more likely to abuse alcohol and/or drugs.
- Kids without a sense of connectedness to their friends and family, or who feel different in some way (appearance, economic circumstances, etc.)
- Family History of alcoholism or addiction.

Not wanting to harm the relationships between themselves and the adults who care about them is the most common reason that young people give for not using alcohol and other drugs.

What You CAN Do

- Be a good role model. Consider how your use of alcohol or medications may influence your kids.
- Talk to your kids about the risks involved with drinking. Encourage them to wait until after high school. Research shows that kids who wait until the age of 18 greatly decrease their chances of having a problem with alcohol, drugs, or nicotine.
- Teach your kids that even when life is upsetting or stressful, drinking as an escape can make a bad situation much worse.

- Try to be conscious of how you can help build your child's self-esteem. Kids are more likely to feel good about themselves if you emphasize their strengths and positively reinforce healthy behaviors.
- Teach kids to manage stress in healthy ways, such as by seeking help from a trusted adult or engaging in a favorite activity.

Recognizing the Signs

Despite your efforts, your child may still use—and abuse—alcohol and/or drugs. How can you tell? Here are some common warning signs:

- Sudden change in mood or attitude
- Change in attendance or performance at school
- Loss of interest in school, sports, or other activities
- Discipline problems at school
- Withdrawal from family and friends
- Secrecy
- Association with a new group of friends and reluctance to introduce them to you
- Alcohol disappearing from your home
- Depression and developmental difficulties

It's important not to jump to conclusions based on only one or two signs. Adolescence is a time of change—physically, socially, emotionally, and intellectually. This can lead to erratic behavior and mood swings as kids try to cope with all of these changes. If your child is using alcohol, there will usually be a cluster of these signs, like changes in friends, behavior, dress, attitude, mood, and grades. If you see a number of changes, look for all explanations by talking to your kids, but don't overlook substance use as a possibility. Get a second opinion from a professional, if necessary.
